DARK FOR FANNING.

He Had Killed Mrs. Taylor.

The Murderer's Razor Found

Statements by His Roommate of Fanning's Confession.

Police Captain Carpenter and Detectr of Mrs. Emily Taylor, at Ninety-sixta street and Park avenue, Saturday night.

The additional evidence is in the shape of a ositive and sworp statement of McMullen. Penning's roommate, to the effect that the later came to tim at 12 o'clock Saturday night in the Harlem Hotel and told him he had just kuled Mrs. Taylor.

This startling statement is corresponded by the finding by the desectives of the prokenbladed razor with which the murderer perpetrated his bloody work.

McMullen was arrested by Detectives Doyle and Keefe in the Hartem Hotel yesterday afternoon and taken before Capt, Carpenter at the Eighty-eightn street station.

Cornell Wants One Whose Reputation is Solely That of a Lawyer.

ollowing: First choice, Col. Robert G. Ingersoil: second choice, Gov. Hill; third choice. Grover Cleveland. The names were presented to the Faculty, who shortly decided that it would not be advisable to invite Col. Ingersoil. Some dissatisfaction was manifested among the students at the action of the Faculty, but as all the professors in the law school are highly esteemed, no action was taken by the senior class.

A Would representative called upon Prof. Collins to-sight. "It was not on account of Col. Ingersoil's religious views." Prof. Collin said, "that we declined to invite Col. Ingersoil but because we wanted a lawyer whose reputation had been made solely in the practice of the law. Col. Ingersoil stands eminent in the profession, but his national reputation has been made more by his oratory and upon the lecture platform than in the practice of the law. The sentiment of the senior class was unanimous for Col. Ingersoil, but my colleagues and myself adhered to this one point. The name of Daniel Dousderly was surgested but decided for the same reason."

The general feeling among the students over the matter is one of disappoinment, and if Col. insersoil had spoken here his address would have been the feature of con-
